Brookline High School Celebrates it's 90th "Muddy River Annual"

Brookline High School this year celebrates its 90th year of having a high school yearbook. However, it was not always known as the Murivian. In fact the name was only coined in 1936 by a student named James Schaye, who was the yearbook editor as well as a writer for the Sagamore. During his senior year Mr. Schaye took it upon himself to name the yearbook. Sick of the terms "yearbook" and "the annual," feeling that they were "overused and mundane," Mr. Schaye decided to officially title Brookline High School's yearbook the Murivian, "a name derived from Brookline's historical title "Muddy River." On April 5th, both the editors of the Sagamore and the Murivian were able to sit down and have lunch with James Schaye (now age 93) and his nephew Richard Schaye, Brookline High School Class of 1960. Both Richard and James have maintained connections to Massachusetts, Richard being the former Principal of Wayland Middle School, while James still resides in Chestnut Hill, Brookline.

"It was really weird that first September when I wasn't working and school was starting."

Those are not surprising words coming from a man who has dedicated 35 years of his life to education, and after a brief two-year hiatus from the job, he has come back for more.

Interim Headmaster John Ritchie has roots at Brookline High School. He began teaching English here in 1974 and later became a housemaster, the equivalent of a dean today. After 12 years, he left to get his doctorate. Since then, he has had many high profile jobs in high schools around Massachusetts.

One of Ritchie's fondest memories is when he was chosen to be a speaker at graduation by two different senior classes, an honor very few receive.

Junior Justin Blocher can attest to Ritchie's oratory skills: after seeing him speak at the introductory assembly for juniors on the first day of school, Blocher said that Ritchie "seemed very experienced and talked about the additional responsibility that comes with being an upperclassman."

Ritchie's retirement in 2000 was prompted when he reached the maximum pension limit by the state retirement program.

"It's not like I was burned out or ready to get away from schools," said Ritchie. "I just decided that what I should do is decompress. When you have a job like this, you're just going all the time, which I really love."

Though he enjoyed the time he had to read, practice his guitar and travel while away from his job, Ritchie agreed to become the interim headmaster here, and his experience so far has been great despite the significant amount of work.

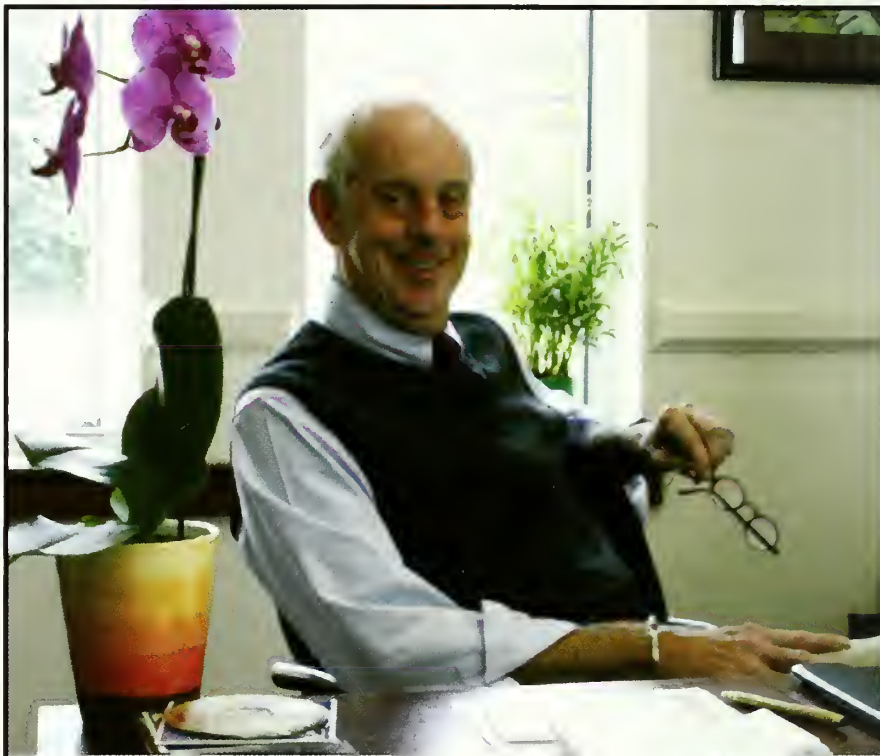

"The first few months have been really enjoyable," Ritchie said. "I just feel so welcomed by everybody."

Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School Superintendent Scott Carpenter, who worked with Ritchie for 10 years, lavished praise upon him.

"He was a great mentor in terms of my role here at Lincoln-Sudbury," said Carpenter. "He's someone who can be a great consensus builder and one who takes his time to think about important decisions. I'm envious of the connections he was able to build with students."

As someone with the unique perspective of having seen BHS in the '60s and as it is now, Ritchie admires the surge of new programs that the past couple of decades have ushered in.

"The core of what I love about Brookline still exists," Ritchie said. "It's got a terrific staff - people who are really smart and really care about students. What's changed is there are so many more programs - the African-American Scholars Program, programs that have been funded by the 21st Century (Fund). There were many fewer when I was here."

According to Ritchie, his transition phase has not been too difficult, thanks to the assistance of former headmaster Bob Weintraub, who helped Ritchie get to know the ins and outs of the job last spring. Although the two didn't know each other well prior to Ritchie's callback here, they became close after working together. Ritchie acknowledges all the hard work Weintraub put in.

"Nobody can replace Dr. Weintraub," said Ritchie.

Ritchie's contract ends after one year, but his work here has interested him in the world of interim positions.

"There are lots of schools, both public and private, where they need somebody for just one year. I really look at that interim position as energetically as I can," said Ritchie. "To me, it's not just about coming in and sitting around to keep the ship afloat. It's about how to use this year as productively as I can." Ayush Kumar can be contacted at kbs.sagamore@gmail.com

HEADMASTER NAMED

& ANNA PARKHURST
Managing Editor
& News Writing Editor

On Feb. 8, 2012, Superintendent Bill Lupini notified parents and staff that Deborah Holman, the assistant principal of Newton North High School, has been hired as headmaster, effective July 1. A final resolution of her contract is pending.

Lupini wrote that he selected Holman as the single finalist due, in part, to feedback he received following the candidates' visits to the school.

In an email to staff, Lupini said, "Specifically, the overwhelmingly positive feedback that I received from you (as well as parents and students) regarding Deb's candidacy made this decision more obvious than I had originally anticipated."

"It's very surreal, as well as exciting," Holman said. "I'm honored and humbled to be moved to the 'one finalist' stage. It's a huge honor and it signals a huge responsibility."

Holman has taught history at Newton North High School, English and history at The International Schools of Kuala Lumpur in Malaysia and has taught for one year at the International School Bangkok, Thailand. From this experience, she hopes to bring what she calls "a teacher sensibility" as headmaster.

In a parent forum on Feb. 1, Holman conveyed her excitement towards revitalizing her connection with students.

"A couple of years ago they took two vice principal jobs, they combined them into one and they took away my teaching, which was like a sword to the heart," Holman said at the parent forum. "I push out and I have to make a special effort to really connect with students. In many ways the headmaster position blows that scheme up. I would have a lot of fun and have a lot more connection with students. I'm dying for that at this point."

Social studies teacher Daniel Green praised Holman's passionate vision for working with students and for supporting teachers. He said he thought that her experience working as an administrator at a similar school would be an asset.

When Holman visited the school with Lupini on Jan. 31, she met a number of students and faculty. She visited English teacher Elon Fisher's A-Elock Public Speaking class.

Senior Omer Sander and his classmates discussed with Holman changes they desire for the school and aspects of the school they wish to remain unchanged.

"She seemed very nice," Sander said of Holman. "She definitely has experience and she knows what she's talking about."

Social Studies Curriculum Coordinator Gary Shuffman, a member of one of the interview committees, has known Holman for many years. He worked as a history teacher at Newton North High School with Holman from 2002 to 2006.

"She's awesome," said Shuffman, describing Holman. "People feel comfortable talking to her. She's very charismatic and very outgoing. I think she knows where we are and where we are coming from. She lives in Brookline and she knows this place."

Assistant Headmaster Hal Mason also recognized the importance of a headmaster's ability to understand the school.

"I'm looking for someone that understands Brookline High School and understands the history of the school and the really excellent and unique high school that this is," Mason said.

With an entry plan that includes her pledge to "listen, listen, listen," Holman hopes to take action to respond to the collective vision of the community. Holman said she "felt very ready for a headmaster position."

On Feb. 6, two Sagamore staff members went on a site visit to see Holman at Newton North High School. Engaged in a meeting interspersed with lighthearted jokes from her colleagues, Holman sat at a table with the school's principal and department chairs, discussing recycling policies, the availability of information to parents and faculty involvement in workshops.

When Holman stood up to speak, she immediately commanded the attention of the room.

"My leadership style is one where it's best when I have numerous stakeholders and people at the table with me, helping advise and helping make and own important decisions for the school."

Walking down the hallways of Newton North High School, Holman turned the heads of faculty everywhere. They greeted her with warm handshakes that she returned with matching emotion.

Samantha Library, a student at Newton North High School, said in an email on Feb. 2 that Holman is a wonderful assistant principal who holds a lot of responsibility.

"She is organized and willing to listen to new ideas. She is very dedicated to her work and is always helpful to teachers and students," said Library.

"Brookline High is a great school and will benefit greatly from having her as its headmaster, despite our rivalry," she added.

A pen-scribbled message on a Dunkin' Donuts bag taped to Holman's office bulletin board said it all: "Please, please don't go."

When the Newton North Tigers attempt to achieve a coveted victory at Parsons Field in Brookline on Thursday, Nov. 14 for the annual Thanksgiving Day football game, their loss against the Warriors exactly two years earlier will remain the memories of many Tiger players. At this year's game, many Newton North seniors will try to avenge their former teammates, who have since graduated.

Going into the Thanksgiving Day game against Newton North on Nov. 16, 2009, Brookline had a 0-10 record. Although Newton North was heavily favored, the Warriors won 18-6.

Even though that game is now two years in the past, it remains a reminder for the Tigers to not make the same mistakes again.

"Of course, the loss still stings," said senior Brendan Fagan, a captain with seniors Mike Bradley and Swardiq Mayanja. "Brookline was a team that had nothing to lose. We had everything to lose, and we just couldn't come through. That was our winning season, and we lost it to a team that hadn't won a game."

The 2009 Thanksgiving Day game was a perfect example of the "anything can happen" aspect of football.

"One of the clichés of the game is that records are always tossed out the window," said Newton North head coach Peter Capodilupo.

He added that upsets can be common in these season-ending rivalry games because of the amount of energy and emotion that is put into them from both sides.

Fagan noted that the Thanksgiving Day game will be the seniors' final high school game, and for many, the last football game of their lives, thus adding even more emotion as players try to go out with a bang.

"Football is not a sport you can play when you're 50 years old," said Fagan. "But, it is a game of opportunity."

This season, Brookline has fallen into a rut similar to 2009, with a below .500 record. In addition, after the Warriors' 41-11 loss to Newton North last year, the Tigers have much to be confident about. Maybe this time around the Tigers won't let the numbers influence them, and they will honor the game by playing their hearts out.

Several storylines intertwine as the Thanksgiving Day football game between Brookline and Newton North approaches. The juniors look to end the season on a high note, hoping for improvement in their senior year. The seniors want to end their final high school football game with a bang. The coaches intend to use the game as a steppingstone to greater seasons in the future.

Regardless of which storyline or team you follow, everyone aspires to beat their rival and secure the win.

Junior Scott Corder, a linebacker, has been looking forward to this game all season long and considers it to be the most important matchup in the team's schedule.

"It's almost like a one-game season for us," said Corder. "It doesn't really matter what our record is, but when you play that rivalry game against Newton North, the win or the loss makes or breaks the season."

Corder said that while he plays hard all season, several factors of the game help the team play harder.

The Thanksgiving Day game will be held at Brookline's Parsons Field, giving Brookline a home-field advantage with the biggest crowd of the season in attendance. According to Corder, there will be nothing on the players' minds except football. He also highlighted the finality of the game, as it is the season's last and the end of the seniors' high school football careers.

Senior Jonathan Gold, a co-captain who is a tight end and a defensive end, stressed the importance of the game and the rivalry. He said the only thing that the team wants to do is win over Newton North.

Senior Kyle Foley, a linebacker, expressed the nostalgia that playing in this final matchup brings.

"It is incredible and it is going to be a crazy game," said

Foley. "We are going to kick Newton North's a--."

Kevin Mahoney, the team's head coach, is no stranger to the rivalry: he was who was captain of the football team in 1997.

"Always one of the biggest goals of the year is to beat Newton North," said Mahoney.

This year, Brookline has been rebuilding the football program and looks forward to being competitive and getting the win against Newton North, Mahoney said. He added that the team knows that they will be going up against tough competition on Thanksgiving Day, as the Newton North Tigers have distanced themselves from Brookline over the past 12 years.

Many paths will converge on Parsons Field at 20 a.m. on Thanksgiving Day, and they will all escalate to one final crescendo. Players on both teams look forward to this special game, one no different in format from other games but very significant in its own right.

Teachers trade classroom for the stage

One night every year, students flock to the Roberts-Dubbs Auditorium to watch their teachers put on costumes, dance, sing and play instruments in Moonlighting, an annual fundraiser for the Friends of the Performing Arts. Why do teachers spend so much of their free time rehearsing for such a potentially embarrassing performance?

"We like to make kids laugh," said world languages teacher Dominique Aumiller. "We don't mind being on stage for people to laugh at us and not with us."

Aumiller has performed three times in performing arts teacher Christen Polos' annual dance performance and once in an instrumental performance.

"It's fun to get on stage and do silly things I used to do in high school," said Aumiller. "We were students too, and it's neat to be able to show students what kind of kids we were."

Spanish teacher Kristina Tobey, who has performed in Moonlighting for five years, looks forward to making an impression on the way her students see her.

"It's fun to do something different and be on stage showing students a different side of you," said Tobey.

In fact, when Performing Arts Curriculum Coordinator Lynn Modell first developed the idea for Moonlighting in 1999, she wanted to create an event that would make students see their teachers in a new light. According to Modell, she felt that it was important for students to know that their teachers could be brave, funny and musical.

"There's this terrible saying that goes, 'those who can't do, teach,'" said Modell. "Moonlighting shows students that this isn't true. In fact, their teachers are really talented."

Senior Josephine Ko had just that impression after attending Moonlighting last year.

"The teachers were so creative and funny," said Ko. "It was surprising how much time and effort they probably put into the performance. They seemed really dedicated."

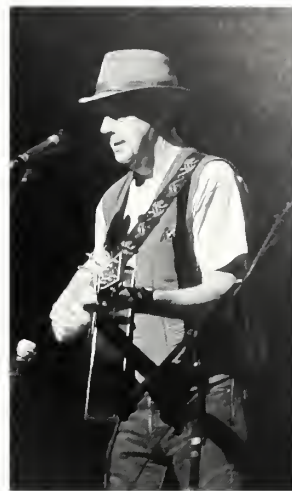

Junior Celine Chin, who has attended Moonlighting for three years, agreed with Ko.

"It's nice to see my teachers go from being strict in the classroom to acting really goofy," said Chin. "I'm always surprised that they have the time to do all this."

Indeed, rehearsing for Moonlighting is very time-consuming, especially for teachers who are also parents. Performers began rehearsing weekly in September in preparation for the show on Dec. 2.

In past years, Aumiller, Tobey and world languages teacher Yukiyo Iida hired a babysitter for their children while they rehearsed. However, when she could no longer babysit, the teachers started bringing their children to rehearsal.

According to Aumiller, this can be very distracting, yet she prefers this solution to not performing at all.

"Last year, I couldn't organize Moonlighting with my family, so I only got to play a very minor role," explained Aumiller. "I got really jealous of everyone else and all the fun they got to have."

Despite her difficulties balancing parenthood with the performance, Moonlighting is always something Tobey looks forward to.

"Every year, I hesitate about doing it and balancing everything," said Tobey, "but then I go to rehearsals and I remember that it's just so much fun. It's hard balancing this into our schedules, but as a parent, you find things you want to do and things you have to sacrifice."

Weintraub's legacy prevails

CLARA DORFMAN
Managing Editor

What will Hal Mason miss most about former headmaster Bob Weintraub, who retired last June?

"He's a terrible golfer," the assistant headmaster said. "He thinks he's great; he still carries clubs that he maybe hit well 30 years ago, and he thinks he can still hit with them. The thing I miss most about Bob is taking his money when I play golf with him."

Before she arrived in Brookline as a staff member, Dean Diane Lande attended several meetings here as a representative of her former school, Lexington High. It was at one of these meetings that she was first introduced to Weintraub.

"I remember him in that meeting in the way that he was sort of swept in, like this famous person," Lande said. "We had to meet him and then he was taken away."

In contrast, Mason formed a different first impression of the man in charge when he met Weintraub during his interview process two years ago.

"What was my first impression of Dr. Bob? Bad footwear," Mason said, then added, "You know, he seemed like a really intense person, very passionate about his school."

According to Lande, Weintraub, now a professor at Columbia University's Teachers College, was one of the colleagues here in Brookline who had the biggest influence on her approach to her career.

"He helped to communicate a way of working with kids, parents and teachers that engaged everyone in a process of mutual understanding," Lande said. "There was never an environment of us against them, whether it was teachers against parents or teachers against kids; rather, we're all in this together."

According to Mason, Weintraub was the most inspirational and motivational person he had ever worked with in a school.

"Dr. Bob was always engaged and always thinking about the larger picture of the school that he wanted to create," said

Mason.

School Within a School English teacher Abby Erdmann echoed this sentiment.

"There are people who can do relationship well, but can't do policy well, or don't do program well, or vision," said Erdmann. "Bob had all of them. You know, Bob's favorite book was Good to Great. BHS was good when I got here. I think he made it good to great."

Though they did not always agree with him, Mason, Lande and Erdmann all feel that Weintraub had an overwhelmingly beneficial influence on the school, taking everything in stride, then doing what he felt would ultimately be best for all.

"Never did he get negative about anything that happened, whether it was a mess in the hallway, a fire alarm pulled or an allegation of misconduct," said Lande. "Everything was just an opportunity to figure it out and move forward."

What does Lande believe Weintraub brought most to the school?

"I think loving everyone, seeing the best in people, always bringing out the best in himself and always being energetic and engaged," the dean said. "He is a constant role model for all of us being our best selves every day."

Chemistry teacher Steve Lantos viewed Weintraub both as a personal friend and as a supportive, trusting and deeply invested colleague.

"Bob was our collective cheerleader, academic guide, authority figure, visionary and friend," said Lantos. "I miss him a whole lot."

Math teacher Lisa Redding said, "Personally, I really just felt that he supported me. He supported what I did in the classroom and he cared about me in and outside the classroom. He was known for writing little notes. And it's just little things, but it makes you feel good. He always took the time to acknowledge and appreciate what you do."

Erdmann agreed, adding that Weintraub treated the school community like a family. She considers Weintraub to be one of the two headmasters, along with former 1970s headmaster Carmen Rinaldi, who have profoundly affected the community during her time here.

"He always put into every speech, 'my Brookline family,'" said Erdmann. "There was an intensity to the way he related to people that we are probably more familiar with seeing in our families than in our halls."

Redding cited Weintraub's lasting collaboration with the 1st Century Fund, a program which the former headmaster established in order to pioneer experimental approaches to education at the high school, as one of his greatest accomplishments on the school's behalf.

"Brookline, before Dr. Bob, was definitely known throughout the state as an excellent school, so it already had a great reputation in Massachusetts," Redding said. "But programs created under Weintraub's 1st Century Fund initiative helped put Brookline on the national map as an innovative school that does anything and everything to help kids. Dr. Bob was willing to go to bat to fight for kids and what was right for them."

Lantos recalled Weintraub as being "focused on the mission of schooling for all children. His 'C'mon, everyone, we're here to do school and do it well' attitude was part of everything he did around the place."

Erdmann said, "Bob was everywhere. I mean, you couldn't believe there weren't six or seven Bobs."

Mason said that he thought Weintraub's lasting contribution to the school was that he hired extremely well.

"The people that are in this school now are excellent. You really have a really, really strong staff, and that makes a huge difference," Mason said.

Redding believes that Weintraub's mantra of freedom with a social consciousness is what will continue to make the high school so unique.

"We have to look out for one another, look out for this building and take care of the place," said Redding. "Dr. Bob really hammered that home, and I feel like we all buy into that, live by that and try to keep his legacy going."

everyone squeeze in Enrollment expected to rise dramatically

BROOKLINE HIGH SCHOOL ENROLLMENT

DAVID ULLMANN
& BARKER COLBERT-REGAN
Arts Writing Editor
& Staff Writer

In the fall of 2007, Brookline High School will be populated by 1,885 students, a steep rise from the 1,777 attending our school today.

Why is this a problem? The high school does not have the space to effectively house this historically high number of students.

The town recognizes that significant actions must be taken to ensure that our schools can sustain this predicted number of students. At present, it appears that nothing is being done to remedy the anticipated overpopulation problem.

According to Rebecca Stone, chairwoman of the Brookline School Committee, Brookline commissioned a group to examine the changing demographics three years ago. When reports showed a likely increase in enrollment, the town was not convinced. In the '90s, enrollment grew from 1,990 to 2,000, and then declined until 2006. However, a significant rise was never expected.

"We looked at the situation and we initially planned to live by those, but we had to rethink," said Peter Rowe, deputy superintendent of administration and finance of the Brookline Public Schools.

Indeed, the initial optimism of those predictions, based on prior trends, proved wrong; they were too low. This was no periodic rise, characteristic to the natural ups and downs of enrollment. This was a fundamental change.

The current concentration of overpopulation remains in the lower grades, the most popular grade in the district being the second grade, with 658 students. This chapter is viewed as a "bottle," traveling through the school system until it reaches the high school, where serious consequences will emerge.

"This bottle is in its seventh year and there is no sign of it ending," said Bill Lipinski, superintendent of the Brookline Public Schools. "I would say that that's not a bottle, it's the new norm."

This dramatic rise is the result of a higher percentage of students choosing to attend public schools. According to Rowe, from 1995 to 2003, around 11 percent of children in Brookline eligible to enroll in kindergarten enrolled in public schools. Today public school kindergarten enrollment is up to 95 percent.

There are some possible reasons for these statistical findings. Lipinski, Rowe and Stone all describe Brookline as a "destination district," a haven for those wishing to send their children to excellent public schools.

"Brookline is a very appealing place for people with children because the public school system is strong," said Stone. "That's always been the case in Brookline."

Assistant Headmaster Hal Mason echoed that sentiment.

"Brookline is a very desirable location, with desirable schools, real estate and an involved community," said Mason. "It is a great place to live."

What is causing increased enrollment now, when schools have always been high quality, is still unclear. Lipinski suggests that the creation of more conditions has increased families' opportunities to live in Brookline.

According to Rowe, the tightening of other towns' budgets has reduced programs and quality of education, sending people to find more desirable school districts like the reputable Brookline. No single factor has been identified.

"It is really a mix of different items all converging," said Rowe.

The solution to this issue is as unclear as its origin.

"I don't think anything is off the table," said Lipinski.

Splitting the semester, establishing another school building for freshmen, increasing the number of elementary schools and converting underused space in the high school into classrooms have all been discussed. Nothing has been determined yet, but according to Lipinski, the town still has time to decide before the problem becomes immediate.

Behind all of these proposed solutions lies a crucial factor: money. According to Lipinski, the current budget is incapable of supporting the massive spending measures required, such as the addition of elementary school classrooms. This, too, is a pressing issue with no definite answer.

Additionally, as all of the slightly overpopulated elementary schools graduate their eighth grade classes into a single high school class year after year, the consequences will become extreme. Beyond 2011, the projected number of high school students is staggering. By 2021, enrollment is expected to be at 2,370 students.

Though there are no set solutions now, this issue will have transcending implications for the town. The Brookline Public Schools administration and the school committee must consider what is necessary to adapt to the increase and overpopulation of its student body.

According to Mason, the community has always supported what was in the best interests of their schools and their children. With respect to overpopulation issues at the high school, Mason is confident that the town will address the situation appropriately.

In lower grades, where the effect of overpopulation has already been felt, education has not been significantly compromised, according to Rowe. He is comfortable with what the town has done so far to accommodate the population influx.

"I don't think the problems are more significant than just the additional pressure of more bodies," said Rowe.

According to Lipinski, there is reason to be optimistic because the town possesses a unique quality that will guarantee its ability to cope with this problem.

"The good news is that we're in a town that gets it," said Lipinski. "In a lot of other places that would experience this, people would say that it's the school's problem, and no one here says that."

ODE TO THAT LINK OF SAFETY PINS

Sidni Frederick

I like the way your Slim, silver bars
Glisten in my pale, white
Bedroom light.
I like the way you snake
Back and forth, side to side,
Seductive.
You dance while hanging still,
Begging me to come over,
From the comfort
Of my bed,
Spend some time,
Tap you once,
And watch you sway
In and out
Of shadow.
But that shadow you hide in
Makes you seem shy.
Could that curve I find so sexual
Be a crinkle?
Could you be bent as a
Rattle snake in warning,
As you dangle innocently
From my lampshade?
If I try to remove
A segment from your end
Will you bite?
Will your gleaming steel pin
Prick
If I free it from its clasp?
Will a spot of blood balloon
Where my careless finger
Kissed your sharpened sword?
Your safety lies
In your careful assembly,
And there is danger
Where you lie undone
In pieces.
Silver nettles erect,
Prepared to pierce
Even the toughest of Flesh.

SUDDEN FICTION: STORIES OF TRANSFORMATION

IT'S NOT ALWAYS RAINY IN SEATTLE

Laura Gumbert

As I enter the bus and the rain pounds harder, I sit on my soggy coat, considering my hatred for Seattle, until I suddenly notice an old, tired man, whose shaking hand reaches down and quickly snaps back up, yet, as I glance down at my polka dot rain boots, I see him, out of the corner of my eye, timidly reach down once again into a Gucci purse beside him and grab a wallet, but by the time I realize what has just happened, the bus has halted, the man has already left with his hands in his shabby coat pocket, and the sky is still thundering like it never would back home.

Snowflakes fall slowly and I smile at their beauty as the bus cautiously approaches. The heat melts the remaining flakes on my shoulders when I enter. I take a seat in my usual spot and reach for my favorite book, thankful for a change of weather. When I look up a few minutes later, I'm surprised to see the same man from two weeks ago sitting in the seat directly across from me. I almost don't recognize him, for a new, warm winter coat has replaced his old, worn-down layer. The bus arrives at my stop, and I reach into my peacoat for a crisp twenty-dollar bill to hand to the man as I leave

"Buy yourself a new pair of gloves, too." I say.

FORESIGHT

Ian Quillen

As soon as I sit on the city bus, with a book in hand borrowed from my workplace, I begin to read Our Mutual Friend, yet I notice an elderly lawyer with a dilapidated briefcase and a worn suit, whose hand reaches into the handbag of the distracted woman sitting next to him, removing her wallet, who, noticing me, grins slyly and rises, when I rise simultaneously, state curtly, "Everyone please check your possessions before leaving" and exit, smiling wryly at the man, who dashes out the bus when a woman shouts, "Impossible! My wallet vanished! That man must have stolen it!" and pursues him at top speed.

Two weeks later, I sit on that same bus. I take out Crime and Punishment from my handbag and read. I rise to stretch while a man with a dilapidated briefcase sitting nearby rises. Recognition crosses his face, then guilt. A wallet flashes through my mind. The bus nears my workplace, so I proceed to the door when someone says, "Ah, madam, you forgot—" I turn. The lawyer gives me my handbag, then exits the bus. I hold the bag; it feels unusually light. Perplexed, I look inside. Nothing remains; my book, my wallet—all gone. Distant echoes of triumphant laughter resound. Laughing to myself, I think, "Ah, well. The joke's on him. I cannot wait until he learns that the wallet contains nothing, and that book is actually an Ancient Greek dictionary from the library where I work...fifty years overdue."

Our Number One Warrior

Since 1981 Mr. Mellett has been inhabiting the corridors and classrooms of Brookline High. As a student from age 14 to 18 he lived the life of the typical BHS student. As an adult he returned to his old haunts to offer his unique services to those in need. If you need someone to climb on the windowsill to pull down the shade that's stuck, if you need someone to capture a live mouse or dispose of a dead one, if you need someone to take a 2:00 A.M. call about an alarm going off who will come to take care of it, or if you need a spill cleaned up, a table moved, an air conditioner installed, a flood stemmed or the heat turned up or down, you call on Mr. Jimmy Mellett. He is our go to guy! He is a jack - of - all - trades with a big heart and just a dash of that Brookline edge! You can always rely on Mr. Jimmy Mellett. The 2012 Murivian is dedicated to Mr. Mellett as someone who contributes behind the scenes and goes beyond the call in a huge way. BHS would not be the place it is today, without Mr. Mellett's good humor, common sense and dedication to doing a tough job everyday just the right way. We, the class of 2012, say thanks in a big way. We appreciate all that you do for our community 24 / 7. Rumor has it that Mr. Mellett currently holds the trophy of the "Brookline High School Lady Warriors Championship Cup" in his office in room 125. Why, you ask? Well, because he has simply out putted the headmaster and the assistant headmaster in their weekly putting matches. Way to go Jimmy. You are our number one putter and warrior!

BHS SPORTS

To The BHS Class of 2012,

It has been gratifying to watch you compete and learn. You've given us many exciting and proud moments in the arenas of sports. Now that your Warrior game days are in the past, we hope you'll think on this: Do well to recite the records, do better to recall every score, do best of all to remember the esprit de corps. Cherish the relationships that you've made here. Go on to make more.

Pete Rittenburg
Athletics Director

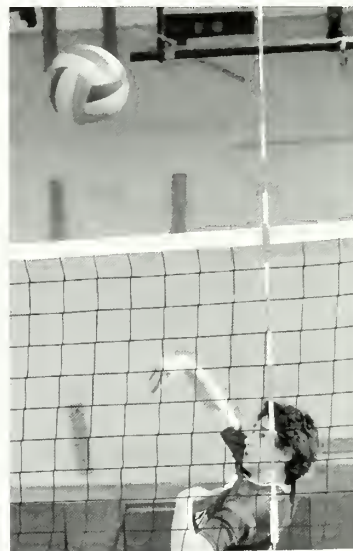

Senior Ari Zimmet, junior Jack Ruske, and Varsity Boys' Coach Katy Ruderman celebrate their spectacular first place finish rowing pairs at the Northeast Regional Championships. They went on to row at the US Rowing Youth National Championship where they placed 4th in the country.

The Varsity Boys' lightweight 8 raced in the US Rowing Youth National Championships, where they were ranked 16th nationally. Dr. John Ritchie Interim Headmaster

To the Members of the Class of 2012,

The main thing I'd like to do is thank you, sincerely, for the warm welcome you have given me during my one-year return to the school at which I began my career way back when. A lot has changed, of course, but there are core aspects of the school and its traditions that seem timeless. It seems to me a place that takes very seriously, but not so seriously that fun, joy, eccentricity, and unconventionality are prohibited: in fact, they are encouraged.

While my time here has been too short to get to know many of you well - a fact that I really regret, as knowing and relating to students was always one of the most enjoyable aspects of being a Headmaster -- I have been so impressed and heartened by your acceptance of me as an "outsider" coming in, in your Senior year, to replace someone whom you all obviously revered and respected so much. It has really meant a lot to me.

I wish all of you the very best as you head off on to the long highway of life. From my experience when I started my career at BHS right up to the present, I feel confident in predicting that the friends you made here, and the teachers you worked with here, will be people you not only remember, but stay in contact with through the years.

Thanks again. You are a terrific class, and you have great things ahead of you.

To the Class of 2012

Ms. Alexander and I feel privileged to have been your Deans throughout your four year journey at Brookline High School. You have distinguished yourselves in all pursuits: in academics, athletics, music, and the arts; as cooks, medical technicians, linguists, world travelers, auto mechanics, playwrights, dancers, social activists, and more. And along the way, you have been leaders and role models who have embraced the highest values of our school community. We have relied on you to be good citizens, to promote a culture of understanding and respect, and to make BHS a fun place to be. Above all, we hope it has been fun and enriching for you. Thank you for coming to school every day!

To the Class of 2012

Looking back years from now on your time at Brookline High School, you will remember many special times. This amazing school is a product of a terrific town, a caring staff, many great teachers, and Dr. Bob. Yet more than any of those, this place is built by you, the students of BHS. As you move on to wonderful things in life we will remember you as a talented and interesting class who for four years helped to form one of the finest high school communities in our nation.
